A Critical Exposition of the Philosophy of Leibniz: With an Appendix of Leading Passages (Classic Reprint) Bertr& Russell

The history of philosophy is a study which proposes to itself two somewhat different objects, of which the first is mainly historical, while the second is mainly philosophical. From this cause it is apt to result that, where we look for history of philosophy, we find rather history and philosophy. Questions concerning the influence of the times or of other philosophers, concerning the growth of a philosophers system, and the causes which suggested his leading ideas all these are truly historical: they require for their answer a considerable knowledge of the prevailing education, of the public to whom it was necessary to appeal, and of the scientific and political events of the period in question. But it may be doubted how far the topics dealt with in works where these elements predominate can be called properly philosophical. There is a tendency which the so-called historical spirit has greatly increased to pay so much attention to the relations of philosophies that the philosophies themselves are neglected. Successive philosophies may be compared, as we compare successive forms of a pattern or design, with little or. no regard to their meaning: an influence may be established by documentary evidence, or by identity of phrase, without any comprehension of the systems whose causal relations are under discussion.
