Once upon a time there was a water slide. It towered above the rest of the water park, looking down on all the other rides. Only the hardest of adventurers would climb its steps and risk speeding down somewhere between the speed of sound and the speed of light. Watching her kids go down the slide caused her stomach to knot up. But still Jessica would watch, because she knew when they got down to the bottom, they would run to her asking if she saw. She didn't want to see, but still she would watch. Never did she think she would go down the water slide herself. Her kids tried, but she would refuse, feeling a little guilty for the look of disappointment on their faces. Then came one particularly hot August day. She decided to pull her kids from school for a "snow day in August" and they drove to the water park. Once again her kids went flying down the slide, causing her heart to jump into her throat every time. And then it happened. Her kids surrounded her, begging. They wanted her to go down the slide. She was terrified but Jessica never let terror stop her. Sure enough, she climbed the stairs. She got to the edge and looked down. It was a long way down. What if something went wrong? What if there was an earthquake and she got bumped off the slide and ended up being splattered on the pavement on the other side of the park? What if? What if? What if, she thought. And then she just went. Her scream lasted the entire trip. As she came to a stop at the bottom she looked up, saw the smiles on her kids faces and knew it was worth the fright. She wrote about how good she felt at that moment. I know how her kids felt. I smile like that whenever I think of Jessica. -Chuck Howe
